Chemical barrels' origins a mystery

by SUSAN GROBER
Staff Reporter

The origin of an estimated 60 or 70 barrels found on the bottom of Little Hawk Lake — at least one being a container for a descaling chemical — is still a mystery.

Last Thursday, Ministry of the Environment director Brian Howden accompanied two divers hired to videotape a collection of barrels found on the bottom of the lake by recreational divers a few weeks earlier. Howden suggests the metal drums could have been used to float a number of boat slips from two nearby docks, but admits it is unusual there should be so many.

"It seems all the docks in this area have barrels under them," says Howden. "It's normal to have floating docks on a lake like this because of the changing water levels."

The barrels are in various stages of decay, says Howden. "We'll see if they've been punctured or rusted out. Some seem to have been weighted down with concrete." The ministry must also determine whether all the drums are empty.

By surveying the videotape the ministry will also "try to get a feel for how many barrels are actually down there, and then figure out how many would reasonably be used to float the docks," he adds.

The ministry is acting in response to a letter received the previous Friday from members of the amateur Stouffville underwater diving club, who found the barrels scattered around a government dock at the Stanhope Township lake on September 2.

Divers peeled a label from one of the barrels and mailed a photocopy to the ministry, says MOE district officer Terry O'Neill. Through the label, ministry officials determined that one barrel had contained Dequest, a descaling agent used in water-cooling towers and air-conditioning units and produced by Monsanto, one of the biggest chemical companies in North America.

The label includes dates and lot

'It seems all the docks in this area have barrels under them,' says the MOE's Bill Howden, who spent last Thursday at Little Hawk Lake after divers found 60 submerged barrels near this large floating dock. Some of the barrels previously contained chemicals, although it's not known yet whether there are any chemicals still inside of them

County unlikely to get more policing soon

by SUSAN GROBER
Staff Reporter

Although some feel Haliburton Village is receiving inadequate police protection, acting Staff Sergeant Steve Adam says Minden OPP is providing "pretty first rate police service."

During yesterday's Dysart et al council meeting, Reeve Murray Fearrey and Deputy Reeve Bill Davis reported on a recent discussion concerning protection with Sgt. Adam.

"There are a number of residents, and I'm one of them, who feel we get inadequate policing in the village of Haliburton," said Davis.

Despite an increase this year of about 225 occurrences—"anything from a rabid dog, to a break-in, to a murder"—and a steady rise in occurrences from year to year, Sgt. Adam says it doesn't seem likely the Minden detachment will receive approval for additional staff in the near future.

"I don't see a big raise for Minden OPP," Sgt. Adam told the Echo in a telephone interview. "Occurrences are steadily increasing because the population is growing. But when the province does consider these matters, it has to work it out on a per capita basis using population and workload figures. Other areas will come before Haliburton County."

"But if we continue on this level, then they might upgrade our staff in another year or two."

There hasn't been a staff increase to Minden's OPP detachment for

Radioactive waste won't be dumped in Bicroft

by MARTHA PERKINS
Editor

Bicroft council's invitation to the Siting Task Force on Low-level Radioactive Waste Management to visit the township does not mean council approves of having radioactive waste dumped in the township, the reeve says.

"I thought it would be a good change to see what the process would be," says Reeve Bill Howe. "That doesn't mean we would be interested in taking waste in any way, shape or form. I just wanted the people to have more knowledge."

The overall objective of the Siting Task Force is to improve the management of low-level radioactive wastes in Ontario," says a brochure distributed by the federal ministry of Energy, Mines and Resources Canada. "For the most part, this requires that waste management practices at existing waste sites be examined and that on-site improvements be planned, where appropriate.

"However, in some cases, it will be necessary to relocate the waste accumulations to a well-managed central facility. For these purposes, the Siting Task Force is following a siting process, based on voluntary participation," the brochure says.

Public meetings were held in major centres and other municipalities could ask the task force to visit its area. On September 22, the task force was at the Cardiff Community Centre (Bicroft township). Approximately 80 people showed up, and Howe says many of them were angry the council had extended the invitation.

"Some of them said 'What's in it for you?' and I said 'You've got to be kidding,'" Howe said in a telephone interview Monday night. When he was asked whether he was Cardiff Reeve Maurice Bradley has the right to sit on council, the Apsley OPP have confirmed.

In late August, lawyers representing Bill Davis, who was defeated by Bradley in the last municipal election, submitted documentation that alleged Bradley did not live in the township, and therefore did not have a right to sit on council, says Sgt. Wayne Galloway of the Apsley OPP.

Because of the documentation, Cardiff council initiated a police investigation, Sgt. Galloway says. The Municipal Elections Act says "in order to be a voter you must be a resident and to do that you must control property." All eligible voters are allowed to run for a council seat. Bradley, previously the township's deputy-reeve, used to live in Cardiff township but before the last election, moved to a different municipality. However, he leases land in Cardiff and this makes him eligible, the police say. This has been backed up by the Ministry of Municipal Affairs.

But the investigation is still continuing. "Something else came along as a result of this (documentation)," says Sgt. Galloway. "The investigation has branched off to something else" but because of the technicalities, he does not want to comment about it.

A story in last week's Echo stated Davis had asked for the investigation. The Echo regrets any misunderstandings this may have caused.

Angry tavern neighbour to lay charges

by SUSAN GROBER
Staff Reporter

Angered over continuing noise problems at the Northwood Inn on Highway 118, a nearby resident has told Dysart et al council he is prepared to lay charges.

Last month Ed Fajar approached Dysart et al council with a petition signed by more than 70 residents disturbed over increased problems with the volume of music played by live bands up until the early hours of morning. Although Northwood Inn owner Malcolm Maxwell—who took over the former Beaconbrook Hotel last spring—agreed with council to initiate construction to solve the noise problem, nothing has yet been done.

"I'm still having problems, and they're not co-operating one bit," Fajar told council yesterday (Tuesday). Fajar has contacted the inn on numerous occasions, but says staff members have been "disgustingly" rude.

Deputy Reeve Bill Davis said he has received many complaints about the noise problem, and people have commented that music has been continuing after midnight.

"It's just slow torture," Fajar said about the noise. "I can't sleep at night."

Fajar said noise often arises from private parties held after the doors to the inn have closed. Council suggested this matter should be looked into by the Liquor Licensing Control Board

Other problems include loud arguments by patrons outside the inn. "One time at five o'clock in the morning we heard a scream," says Fajar. A few people were fighting down below. "We don't even know if people are being killed down there."

Fajar said any noise problems were heightened during the summer because doors and windows at the inn were kept open for air circulation. Maxwell had promised council the noise problem should be solved with installation of a new heating and air conditioning system so doors and window can be kept shut. Insulation and an addition built to provide a double-door system were also promised to further alleviate the problem.

"He hasn't done anything, and I think he should be fined," said Fajar. "Other municipalities will lay charges, so why can't we?"

Council told Fajar if he was willing to lay a charge, the municipality can enforce its noise bylaw. "Damn right I'm ready," said Fajar. "I'll lay the charge."

Swan contest winners announced

by MARTHA PERKINS
Editor

The winners of the White Swan Story Writing Contest have been chosen by a panel of three judges.

The contest, initiated by the Echo in the spring, was open to people in three age categories: students in Grades 4 to 8; high school students; and adults. The story had to be about a white swan, preferably the one which lives in the Grass Lake narrows every winter.

More than 200 entries were received, making judging difficult for Joan Irwin, Kathy Stouffer and me. Mrs. Irwin is an accomplished journalist and fiction writer, and Mrs. Stouffer owns Master's Book Store. The top three or four entries in each category were chosen and then discussed in detail.

Writing style was important, but so too was the content and message of the story. Many were very well written, but had endings with no moral tone; or, a message which wasn't very positive.

Only the top winner in each category will be awarded the prize of a $50 gift certificate to be spent at either Patrick Books or Master's Book Store in Haliburton. The contest was sponsored by the two book stores, the Haliburton County Library and the Echo.

The winners are as follows:

In the Grades 4 to 8 category, Amanda Stephenson's "Enchanted Times" was an imaginative, flowing and very well-written tale about three children who were transformed into two beavers and a white swan by an evil wizard. Amanda, a voracious reader who was in Grade 5 at Archie Stouffer Elementary School last year, was chosen the winner in this category. Honourable mention goes to Jacoba Lilius who had a delightful writing style, Sarah Lewis whose long story was imaginative and full of realistic dialogue, and Tammy Lee, who wrote an evocative story about a young girl and a lonely swan who returns to the river year after year.

Judging the high school category was also very difficult and in the end, Sarah Stouffer's imagina-interested in having the waste stored in Bicroft. "I said no way."

"All I tried to do was give the people an understanding about the process" as a purely educational procedure, Howe says. "We're not committed to anything and they made that very clear. All it does is give (the task force) a chance to talk about what they are doing. There was no hidden agenda, nothing."

Howe says that the invitation also has nothing to do with the two abandoned mine sites in the township, Dyno Mines and Bicroft mines. In the 1940s, uranium was extracted from these mines. When the market for uranium crashed, the mines closed down about 30 years ago.

However, there are still "trailings" at the mines which are slightly radioactive, Howe says. Trailings are pieces of processed rock after the uranium has been extracted.

The presence of the trailings "gives us a chance to say we've got it here now so we can take some more and that's what I want to dispel," Howe says. Just because the mines are there, and there is some problem with them, doesn't mean the township wants to accept more waste.

The federal and provincial governments are already looking into the situation at the Bicroft mines, Howe said. Earlier this summer, he was very upset about a Global television report which said Paudash Lake was contaminated by the mines and there were serious problems with radioac-tivity. Afterwards land values dropped, but Howe says they are now back up to their former level.

"It was just terrible," says Howe, condemning the show for being biased and containing inaccurate information.

"It's not really a problem," Howe says of the mines. "The locals don't have a problem with the mine situation."

Meanwhile, at last Thursday's Cardiff council meeting, councillors were angered they weren't invited to the meeting, and also that it was not made clear that though the meeting was in Cardiff township,

"If in fact amalgamation does take place down the line, I'd be very concerned about being part of that," Bradley said. There has been some talk of making the two townships into one again, but no public, formal discussions have been organized.

"It seems strange that all of the communities south are rejecting (the waste)" while Bicroft seemed to be entertaining the idea of having it stored there, Bradley said. "Here we are going to store things and we don't know whether it's stored properly."

There was also some concern about the notification of the meeting. On September 17, there was an ad, approximately 5" by 5" in the Bancroft Times. In large print were the words "Notice of Public Meeting with the Siting Task Force." In small print, about the size of this type, was the date and location and the following announcement:

"Local council has requested a public meeting with the Siting Task Force. The meeting is open to all residents of Bicroft and interested individuals from the area. Its purpose is to provide information on the process being implemented to site a low-level radioactive waste management facility by the federally-appointed Siting Task Force."

"The siting process ensures that the community decides if it wishes to participate in this voluntary process, and the community may opt out any time during the process; the community will be active in the decision making; the community will receive compensation to enhance local benefits; the community will choose the technology and impact management options; and there will be no compromise on issues of environmental protection and human health and safety."

"If it's as I hear it to be, I'd like to object to it," said Bradley, receiving the support of council.

"It seems strange that all of the communities are rejecting the waste, while Bicroft seemed to be entertaining the idea of having it stored there. If it's as I hear it to be, I'd like to object to it."

tion won her the first prize. (Mrs. Stouffer, Sarah's mother, did not participate in the judging.) Mrs. Irwin was particularly taken with the use of verse and the writing style. Runners up were Mark Robinson's story of "A Swan Named Tiberius", which was rich in detail. Laura Jackson's "Swandance" told of a delightful relationship between a girl and her grandfather, and two swans which promise each other ever-lasting love.

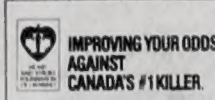

Not knowing how to end a story was the main problem in the adult class. Many of the stories began well but then became lost and unfocused.

The winner in this category is Kathy Adams' "The Story of Gwenelda, the Winter Swan Queen." In it, Gwenelda must go through a learning process to make her a fair and understanding queen. It's imaginative, well-written and has a good moral to the story. Runners up were N.J. Burk's "The Legend of Grass Lake" with its colourful characters, "Swan Magic", a mystical tale written by Faith Aggett and Wally Newcombe's "Ugly", which has a well-developed central character.

In the next few weeks, the Echo will publish the top stories in each of the categories.

The judges would like to thank everyone for the tremendous amount of interest shown in the contest, and for the entrant's patience over a busy summer.

County's police better than average: Sergeant

several years, says Sgt. Adam. "There are times we'd like to have twice as many officers, but on a day-to-day basis we do all right. We have to work with what we have right now. The way government funding seems to be going these days, it doesn't seem like anyone will be getting the money."

Presently, Minden OPP have 24 police officers on staff, but this includes Staff Sergeant Bill Bailey, who is on sick leave, and Gary Chapman and another officer who are seconded for other duties outside the county.

Chapman is currently traveling around the province helping to implement a new police radio system. Due to start in January, this radio system will help free up one Minden officer because all dispatch will be handled in Peterborough. "Chapman is training people on how to use that system," says Sgt. Adam.

During an incident such as the recent murder in Harcourt, "for a few days we had to draw a substantial amount of manpower from throughout the county to investigate," but "I don't necessarily agree that our protection of Haliburton Village is inadequate," says Sgt. Adam.

"At the moment, we can't afford to have a man in Haliburton Village at all times. The percentage of occurrences in the area just doesn't warrant it. We don't have a man in Minden Village all the time, either."

"Haliburton County is a large area," he says. "We have a fair amount of travel time, but we're still in good shape."

Minden OPP will generally solve about 48 percent of criminal activity overall, while the province-wide average is about 39 per cent. "We're still providing a pretty first rate police service."

Although police might not respond to a call immediately if necessary staff members aren't on hand at the time, Sgt. Adam says officers will still investigate. "The more serious the call and the more imminent the danger, the more active our response will be. But, and I've noticed it even this past month, once the summer is over, we've had more time to work on these things. Recently we just cleared a break and enter case in Haliburton Village."

Council decided to send a resolution to the premier and the solicitor-general asking for the manpower at Minden to be reviewed.

The hiring of a night-watchman in conjunction with Dysart et al's BIA (Business Improvement Area) will also be looked into. Normally a watchman is hired during the busy summer season to keep an eye on the downtown area and report any problems to the police.

"Having anybody watch the town and report to us is a great help," says Sgt. Adam, who offers his encouragement to the idea.

Commune leader caught

The 10-week long search for Burnt River commune leader Roch "Moses" Theriault and several of his followers has finally ended.

Theriault, 42, leader of the so-called Ant Hill Kids commune near Burnt River, was arrested Friday afternoon along with two female members of the commune, Nicole Ruel, 32, and Chantalle Lavrie, 31. The Children's Aid Society is currently caring for two male infants, less than six months of age, who were found with the trio, arrested near the commune. On Thursday, police captured another commune member, Jacques Giguere, 36.

The search for Theriault and other members resulted from complaints lodged with the authorities by

Fire protection costs may rise 133 percent in Snowdon

by SUSAN GROBER

Staff Reporter

Fire protection costs for Somerville Township may be up 133 per cent and part of this increase will be passed on to Snowdon residents.

On October 2, clerk-treasurer Ernie Hills presented council with a letter from Somerville. It states the municipality's Fire Committee members have discussed protection agreements with surrounding townships for 1990 and passed a resolution for an increase to Snowdon.

Somerville council endorsed this recommendation at its September 25 meeting and requested that Snowdon Township be advised that the current operating budget for its fire department is "in excess of $60,000."

Snowdon's present agreement calls for an annual standby fee of $1,500, with fire calls charged at the rate of $150 per truck per hour for the first two hours and an additional $65 for each hour thereafter, plus labour costs for each call.

Upon renewal of this agreement effective January 1990, the standby fee will be $3,500, with $200 charged for each of the first two hours and $150 thereafter.

The agreement "shall continue in effect from year to year except that either party may terminate this agreement, or propose amendments thereto by giving the other Township notice in writing at least 90 days prior to the anniversary date," reads the resolution.

Contents and origin of 60 sunken barrels are still a mystery to MOE numbers, so the ministry knows it was purchased from Monsanto about two years ago. "Drums like this one have a lot of markings on them," O'Neill told the Echo in a telephone interview. "The company producing something like that has records as to when it was purchased and who bought it. They know exactly where to look. Definitely our ultimate aim is to look at these barrels and find out how they got in the lake. We're going to try to find who did it."

"It shouldn't be too much of a problem to track them down."

The ministry often receives calls from people concerned about what they find in their lakes, but O'Neill stresses "it's not common to find such a large number of barrels. It's pretty hard to figure out why there would be 60 or 70 drums found at the bottom of a lake in Haliburton. It's such an unlikely situation."

O'Neill can't say what procedure the ministry will take to determine who dumped the barrels. "Until I have a good handle on what's down there, I really don't know."

Company represented

Monsanto director Duncan MacIntyre was sent from the United States-based Mississauga company last Thursday to accompany the ministry during its investigation.

"Our first thoughts were to check to see if the drum was actually ours," says MacIntyre. "We also want to assess the environmental impact and offer our assistance to the ministry."

"When we sold this product to a customer, part of our responsibility is to follow this product right through to the end. Our responsibility doesn't end with the first sale."

Although the majority of the "empty drums used to hold up the wharf" didn't come from the Monsanto company, MacIntyre says divers have taken samples, and one from the plastic Monsanto drum will be analyzed by the company.

The drums found by the diving club are all metal and appear to have been underwater for sometime. MacIntyre says Monsanto's products are stored in polyethylene drums. "Those are all intact and seem to be used to float the wharf."

MacIntyre feels the Monsanto company is free of any negligence. "But we're not content to just sit back in this matter. We don't like to see our drums being used like this. The company stresses proper disposal. Despite the fact that we're not the drums in question, we're investigating this matter ourselves."

If any traces of Dequest were still in the barrel, MacIntyre says it should cause no harm to the lake water. Dequest is approved as a water cleaner at five parts per million. "At this stage, it doesn't look serious but we've supplied the MOE with data on all our products."

Ideas of the big, bad, careless chemical manufacturer is beginning to change, stresses MacIntyre. Over the past month, member companies of the Canadian Chemical Producers' Association have been acting under a responsible care policy which will help erase this myth, he says.

"Responsibility doesn't lie with the first sale. It begins with the making of the product, where you try to increase its biodegradability. And it ends with proper disposal of the product and its container. That's why I'm here today. There are more and more responsible chemical manufacturers trying to address the present problems and prevent them in the future."

In accordance with the responsible care policy, the Monsanto company will determine who that particular barrel was sold to and, if they were negligent, the policy states the company must stop selling to that customer.

"We have a responsibility in correcting that incident and also working to prevent it from occurring again," says MacIntyre. "For the last couple of months, we've been educating all our employees on this type of thing."

"In my profession, I personally have a responsibility for what happens to our product. I'm not just hiding behind a corporation."

OPP search for healthy thieves

by SUSAN GROBER

Staff Reporter

If the people who broke into The Storeroom last week were hungry, it couldn't have been for money, says owner Wayne Henderson.

An air conditioner was pushed in to gain access to the Minden health food store last Tuesday night. Although there wasn't serious damage and no money was stolen, thieves made off with about $1,000 worth of food: a 10-kilogram carton of natural pistachio nuts and a large round of Jarlesburg cheese.

"Why would they break into a health food store?" asks Henderson. "Either they were stupid, or hungry, or drunk, or on drugs. I don't have any money, and I don't have any drugs. All I've got is food."

Minden OPP have obtained fingerprints from bags of cheese, nut mixtures and candies found in the back yard behind the store.

"It was almost like they took a few things and were then scared away," Henderson says. "Hopefully the police will find them."

This is the third break-in at The Storeroom this year. Bars which are usually placed at the store's back window were replaced with an air conditioner during the summer. Last week the thieves were able to boost themselves up on a bookstand to enter the premises.

Pioneers honoured with church window

by MARTHA PERKINS
Editor

The legacy of Mark and Jane Sisson is not just the church which stands on the land they donated in the 1930s. No, with their 12 children, whose children now have children, the Sissons also provided most of the congregation.

"Everyone here is a relative—my nieces and nephews and cousins," says Don Sisson, sitting in a straight-back pew in St. Andrew's Anglican Church in West Guilford on Sunday morning. Don, the youngest of the 12 Sisson children, was also joined by his eight remaining brothers and sisters as the community gathered to dedicate the church's first stained-glass window.

The three-pane scene—loaf of bread on the left, Jesus in the centre, and a chalice of wine on the right—was commissioned by the Sisson children in memory of their parents. Mark and Jane, nee Barnum, were early Guilford residents and today, all but one of their children live in Haliburton County. Ina MacGuire and May Horseley, the two oldest girls, both live at Hyland Crest in Minden. Brant's in Haliburton, Carl's in Ingoldsby, Vivian Simms lives in Woodstock, Holly's remained in West Guilford, Max is in Haliburton, Ray's in West Guilford, and Don joins his brothers in Haliburton. (Andy, Ida and Calvin have passed away but Calvin was represented at the service by his widow, Phrona.)

Together with their spouses, children and relatives, they attended Sunday's special service when Father John Phillips officiated the dedication.

"We've committed ourselves to the past but also to the future," Father Phillips says. St. Andrew's has been strong since its inception in 1931, and judging by the number of young children at the service, it will remain strong for years to come. Together, Father Phillips said, the congregation can face the challenges which await them.

Stained glass artist Wendy Ladurantaye had a few challenges of her own when she was designing and making the window. (Actually, it's not stained glass because that implies the glass is painted. Instead, Mrs. Ladurantaye uses pieces of coloured glass and solders them into the design.)

By touring various churches with some of the Sisson children, a consensus was reached on what the window was to depict. The process started nine months ago and special attention was paid to all facets of the work, from choosing and waiting for the right glass (the glass used for the halo has a dove-like image in it), to deciding the colour of Jesus's eyes.

"The face was really difficult because they rest of the body could be just anybody," Mrs. Ladurantaye explained at a reception following the service. "When you're doing Christ's face, you feel you're not worthy enough. This is such an important person to so many lives, how can you draw it?"

The eyes are blue to represent the living water, and no matter where you are, Mrs. Ladurantaye says they will be looking at you. The left hand is enlarged as it points towards Jesus's heart because Mrs. Ladurantaye wants people to notice it. "I am the way, the truth and the light," she wants his actions to indicate.

Jesus is standing on rocks, (the church as a strong foundation) and in the background are the shimmering blue waters of Pine Lake. The mountains, while similar to those of the Highlands, represent Mount Calvary.

"(The images) may be clichés but at the same time there's a lot of depth. They're important parts of the church."

From now on, the first thing worshippers will see when they walk into St. Andrew's is the glowing portrayal of faith. It is indeed a fitting tribute to Mark and Jane Sisson.

Cardiff adds support to lobby

The campaign to make the Ministry of Health live up to its commitment to fund the county's proposed 18-bed continuing care unit has received the support of Cardiff council.

"I think it's very sad that the ministry can mislead the public in such a fashion," said Reeve Maurice Bradley, referring the province's initial approval of the project and, after a fundraising drive garnered more than $400,000, wondering whether the unit is really needed. "(Premier David) Peterson has got to shape up and hold to their promises because it's disastrous for rural communities."

At last month's meeting at the Haliburton Hospital, where the unit would be built, health minister Elinor Caplan said she would like the community to explore other forms of community health care instead of institutionalization. Bradley pointed out that home visiting becomes very difficult here in the winter, when some houses are almost inaccessible because of the snow.

Council passed a motion supporting Stanhope Reeve Harry Davis's efforts to pressure the government to "regain its credibility" by approving the construction of the unit. Costs are estimated to be rising by $30,000 every month the construction is delayed.

Deputy-reeve Keith Murphy then suggested another strongly-worded letter be sent to Caplan and this was approved as well.

Message of CHANGE music to the ears

"We are one step closer to where we want to be; close enough to see that if we can be open and see it in the light, we'll be one step closer in our dream tonight."

by MARTHA PERKINS

Editor

BRENT TITCOMBE HAS A WAY of making the message as entertaining as the medium. Changing our polluting ways, finding respect for people of other cultures, letting our imaginations take over our intellect, all become themes he explores in his songs. And instead of the heavy weight of his message crashing down with the last chord on his guitar, his audience finds their spirits uplifted by his humorous and melodious appeals for greater understanding.

"Our imaginations are one of our greatest resources and all of us are here because we believe in the power of change," the singer said at Sunday night's fundraising concert for CHANGE—County of Haliburton Advocates for a Naturally Good Environment. "I've a feeling in my heart it's time for us to sing, and sing together."

Many of the 30 or so people sitting in the high school gym were long-time fans of the Canadian performer/song-writer. His ballads have been heard on national radio and television—though none of his television audiences ever had the opportunity to watch him file a broken, guitar-string strumming fingernail—and his performances enjoyed at concerts and festivals from coast to coast.

But there is a newness to many of Titcombe's songs. Titcombe the Jamaican rasta man eating his patties and rasta pasta. Titcombe the Buddhist monk weaving a tale about a spider. Titcombe the environmentalist calling for a wiser use of the earth's resources. ("They say this is nothing new, but the people who know are too few.") Humour is ever-present as well. Just before he sang his native "power song", Titcombe explained how in times of stress, it will give him peace while also empowering him to face whatever challenges lay ahead. Problems arise if he sings it, in the typical falsetto voice used by native performers, when he's on his way to an audition. Waiting for the light to turn green, people in neighbouring cars do not know what to make of this impromptu concert of wails and woebegone facial expressions.

Titcombe, in true Canadian fashion, often used himself as a source of his humour. His face contorted while singing his mock power song, he makes you understand why those people in the other cars might find him just a bit strange. In other acappella tunes, he uses his voice as a second—and third and fourth—instrument. A somber look could break into an effervescent smile, letting the audience know he was not just there to perform; he was also enjoying their company. And his impromptu nail-filing was turned into a comedy sketch—"She'll never wash her nail file again" one woman in a swoon said.

Before Titcombe began his performance, you would have thought Ed Moll and Doug Cutler would be tough acts to follow, or at least live up to. The first two performances were excellent. In the end, all three musicians added something to the evening, each in their own unique way.

With all due respect, Moll sings well for a minister. (He's the United Church minister for the Minden charge.) He too is quite funny when he wants to be and yet with a strum on his guitar, can silence an audience into serious contemplation.

A former busker, or street performer, Moll's voice rang strong and clear, his guitar the perfect accompaniment. However, it was the words of his songs which gave Moll his true strength.

"I want a tree in a yard; I want a yard to build a home; I want the kind of home to make me safe and share with my friends," was the chorus of Moll's first song, which he wrote himself. Another line: "If we didn't have so much to throw away maybe we'd have more to give."

Then there was a humorous song by a California pastor with a serious kick to it: "Take off your shoes, you're standing on holy ground," was followed by verses about the eighth day of creation, when God couldn't see the heavens because of all the smog—"Nothing in the good book says you've got to pollute it (the earth.)"

Funniest of all, however, was the soul-wrenching blues song sung in the best "My-baby-don't-leave-me" tradition. Moll's twist, however, is that it's written about his son leaving home for his first day of kindergarten—"the first of the great goodbyes."

He sang: "My baby done and left me feeling so blue/He didn't want my lovin' now I don't know what to do. (He said) 'I don't want your lovin', Sesame Street is such a bore'. That's what he said to me then he walked out the door."

The audience almost cried with sorrow when Moll sang about a mother watching her son die from one to be emulated. "It's hard to believe in a white man's culture when he's turning the earth into hell."

A recurring theme in Cutler's music was the need to see the world through a child's eyes, full of wonder and searching for the mysterious, not just the commercial. "Free the future now, you souls of mystery, for the sake of all still to come."

"I'm getting the sense that music is the gift that soothes the pain," said CHANGE's LaDonna Smith, who thanked the musicians. She had also begun the fund-raising concert with an explanation of what CHANGE is, and what it's trying to achieve.

"CHANGE is a grassroots circle of friends who for the past year and a half have volunteered their time, energy, vision, creativity and money to act as an advocate, a voice, speaking on behalf of our delicate eco-system and on behalf of our children who will inherit our actions," Smith said. "It is committed to focusing public awareness on such areas as forest and wetlands preservation, continuing the task of recycling so that each household, business and event in Haliburton County recycles consciously and with pride."

Meetings are held the first Friday of every month at the old Otto house across from Sir Sandford Fleming College's Haliburton campus. The next meeting is November 3.

The concert was held to help the group sponsor local recycling events and the performers donated their talents to the evening. The sound system was provided by Brad Sales.

Ed Moll

AIDS. "Even though the world casts you away, right now the right thing is just holding your hand."

Cutler began his performance with two "new age" piano songs from his tape. Gentle rhythms and nuances allowed individual thoughts to drift along pleasant lines, and had the songs been played at the end of the concert, everyone surely would have floated home.

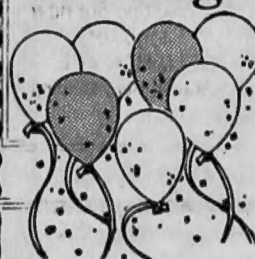

Adding his voice to his next songs, Cutler stressed environmental themes which reflect on the purpose of CHANGE. "This would not be an intelligent time to destroy the world," he sings in one song which leads itself into the next, Peace Cry.

Another song he wrote several years ago from the native perspective shows how our culture is not the

Giving thanks

Caught up as most of us are, in a headlong rush to make money, to be successful, to get things done, it is easy to forget the simple joys, the quiet moments, the brief but shining epiphanies in which wonder and beauty stir our souls. These are the still points from which we measure the progress of our lives; the moments when we truly, joyfully exist in a world where beauty yet transcends ugliness, where love is still a force more powerful than hatred.

In the frantic, nerve-jangling bustle of daily life, we seldom take time to number our blessings, to give quiet thanks for all that is good and rewarding and beautiful in our lives. The tranquil yet stimulating days of autumn are an invitation to survey the landscape bounded by our personal horizons, and never more so than at Thanksgiving. For those of us fortunate enough to live in Haliburton County, there is much to give thanks about.

We can be thankful for the wondrous landscape we share, and for the freedom to savour it; for the crisp days of autumn when the spirit is refreshed and the body invigorated; for the power and perfection of nature, which flourishes and works its mysteries despite the abuses we heap upon it; for the company of friends and the love of those who know our hopes, fears and imperfections; for the dedicated people who run our councils and the myriad other local organizations which maintain the order and create the opportunities upon which a community is built; for the spirit of generosity that reaches across the barriers of isolation we are forever building; and on a personal note, for the opportunity to work with talented people who share a profound and tireless commitment to do their best, whatever the challenges they face.

Those are but a few of the numberless things for which this writer can give thanks. Whatever yours may be, there is truly much worth appreciating in this season of change.

Policing

The concerns are familiar, and so too is the indifference with which they are likely to be met. On Tuesday, Dysart et al council decided to send a letter to the Premier of Ontario and Solicitor General asking for an increase in the number of officers at the Minden detachment of the Ontario Provincial Police. Council believes — and many local people share their view — that the area is inadequately served by a detachment strength of only 24 officers and administrators, a number that has not been increased in many years, despite the obvious and substantial growth in the area the detachment serves.

Understandably, Minden detachment commander Sgt. Steve Adam believes his officers are doing a good job of policing Haliburton County, given the constraints under which they operate. While occurrences are up, it appears there have been no serious incidents to which police have been unable to adequately respond. It seems likely, however, that if police were more visible, particularly in Haliburton village but elsewhere as well, there would be fewer break-ins, less vandalism, less speeding and dangerous driving, and a greater respect for the laws which police are expected to enforce. It's a small point perhaps, but one has only to stand on main street and watch the traffic pass to know that a substantial number of people flout seatbelt regulations, and put their children at risk by failing to use car seats. Local roads are plagued with speeders and lane hoggers, and one can seldom drive anywhere without encountering a fool risking his or her own life and that of others.

The society we cherish, to way of life whose future we increasingly fear for, is built upon a foundation of essential services and infrastructures — roads, schools, hospitals, courts — and police. All of them are suffering at present at the hands of a government whose priorities are out of step with the basic needs of Ontario residents.

None of us need pay more taxes to ensure that the OPP are given the equipment and the officers to do their job effectively. Rather, we need to send a message to Queen's Park that we can do with less of the frills to have more of the essentials. Dysart won't get the answer it wants, but at least it isn't sitting back complacently while a bad situation gets even worse.

Corridor decision disappointing

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Our readers write...

Editor's note: The following letter was sent to John Parish, councillor for Dysart et al.

Dear Mr. Parish:

Please bring to the attention of Dysart council my concerns about County council's progress in dealing with the Haliburton to Kilmount railway corridor.

I am disappointed to see that the Haliburton County Snowmobile Association has been granted use of the corridor before the concerns of the adjacent property owners have been satisfactorily dealt with.

The concerns about the corridor being used by other motorized vehicles, brought up at a public meeting, should have been dealt with first.

I would like a motion from Dysart council to County Council which says: The concerns of the adjacent property owners are more important than the snowmobile association's access. Permission for the snowmobile association to use the corridor should be delayed or withdrawn until the concerns of the property owners, as expressed at the public meeting about restricting use by other motorized vehicles, is dealt with completely.

Thank you for your time and assistance.

Yours truly,

Godfrey Tyler
Haliburton, Ont.

Bed of concern

Editor's Note: The following letter was sent to Elinor Caplan, Ontario Minister of Health, concerning the delay in funding for the proposed 18-bed continuing care unit.

Dear Mrs. Caplan:

At the annual meeting of the Soyers Lake Ratepayers' Association on October 7, 1989, members discussed the provincial government's withdrawal of its support for the much-needed expansion of the Haliburton Hospital. The following resolution was unanimously passed: "That the association approach the Minister of Health and request that the decision to defer the expansion of Haliburton Hospital be rescinded and that the expansion be put in hand without further delay."

We trust that you will respond to this expression of concern along with the many others that you have received.

Yours truly,

(Mrs.) Primrose Birrell,
Secretary.

In praise of tech

To the Editor:

Bob Giuliano had some bitter words to say recently (Sept. 27) about technology, the aggression of the strong among us, and the futility of mindless ambition. And while I am sad that he is disappointed at a stage in life when he wants to feel he has "arrived", nothing he said was really new or particular to this generation.

Man, as a species, has always been technologically aggressive and ambitious. "Technology" has always been another name for the tools he has used to control his environment, other animals, and his fellow man. From a dog sled to a snowmobile, from a quill pen to a computer, from a hoe to a tractor and from catapults to submarine-launched missiles, man has relentlessly pursued more efficient ways to create and to destroy. That's his nature and it's no surprise to discover that there are some who don't find that nature attractive.

Power-lunching real estate moguls in Toronto are no worse than their soul brothers throughout the ages. They just have new toys. There's also not much point wringing our hands about "stoned out" kids and decaying cities because elders have almost always thought that the younger generation was going to hell in a hand-basket. Ancient Egyptians, hundreds of years before the birth of Christ, reflected with despair about the youth of their era and were less than wildly optimistic about the future of mankind in general. Those with grey hair (or no hair) continue to believe they have some sort of monopoly on knowing what is good and what is right. And the aggressive individuals among us still think they have a God-given mandate to subdue and control the meek

IT WON'T BE LONG before winter is here and the ground is covered with snow. In its recent newsletter, the Haliburton County Snowmobile Association reports that two new diesel-powered Bombardier BR-60's with 10-foot-wide hydraulic drags are ready to begin grooming. The 5 BR-100's will be serviced and ready to go by December. With seven pieces of tracked industrial grooming equipment the Association has the potential for a lot of expense this year. If we get early cold and snow they can save thousands of dollars in needless repairs. The local "Oldies" are calling for a good winter because the hornet's nests are high or low, or who cares.

The HAVE Annual Meeting will be held at the Haliburton High School this coming Saturday, October 14 at 7:30 PM. The meeting will highlight each project officer or director who will be showing slides and giving a presentation on his project, one for the Gambia, one for India and the other from Nicaragua. We are reminded that the H.A.V.E. Committee is always on the lookout for volunteers who will help with its annual concert, walk and other projects.

Friends of William H. Foote of Haliburton will be sorry to learn that he died at the Wellesley Hospital in Toronto on Wednesday, October 4, 1989. He was in his 65th year. Bill, as he was called by everyone who knew him, was a very friendly man who always seemed to have a pleasant smile. He worked in public relations with a large company before coming to Minden where he purchased the former Minden Progress newspaper. Due to ill health he was forced to retire and for the past few years lived near Haliburton. A Memorial Service will be held at the Gordon A. Monk Funeral Home, Minden on Saturday, October 14th at 3:00 PM.

Stanhope Township's Halloween Party is all set to go at the Stanhope Community Centre on Tuesday, October 31, from 6:00 to 9:00 PM. The evening will feature prizes for the most original, funniest, scariest and best adult costume in the Costume Parade. All this plus games and a treasure hunt.

A travel survey in the Toronto Star reports that resort and hotel operators in Central Canada suffered through a poor summer, a trend that will continue for some time, says the head of the Conference Board of Canada's tourism research unit. The July numbers show a continued big shift of Canadians and their travel dollars going south and fewer Americans coming up to spend in Canada.

The Wilberforce United Church is 100 year old and the members of the church are gearing up for the Anniversary celebrations. It's all coming up on Saturday and Sunday, October 21 and 22. The big event will begin with a Pot Luck Supper to be held at the church on Saturday evening at 5:00 PM followed by an evening of music and song with the Haliburton Guild Choir, Ray and Chris Johnston and Susan Grimes of Gooderham and others. On Sunday breakfast will be served at the church from 9:00 AM to 11:00 AM followed by a special service with guest speaker and former minister Rev. C. Catto.

Paul Robinson and Alan Rydman, both of Haliburton and former H.H.S.S. students, are now attending the University of Waterloo and playing football with the university team. The Waterloo Warriors won another game on Saturday afternoon, their second consecutive victory after ending a four-year, 33-game losing streak against York last weekend, with a 25-21 win over McMaster. We understand that the two local boys are playing outstanding football and should be a great help to the team as they make a bid for the play-offs. There's plenty of excitement on the University of Waterloo campus this year as the students finally have something to cheer about.

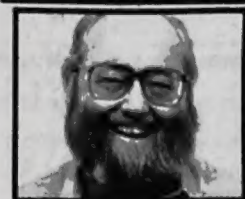

Some people say that the world is travelling at a very fast pace these days and I think that we would all have to agree that this is the way it is. It seems that we are all caught up in this "rat race" and we don't seem to have time to visit our friends or even say hello anymore. I'm one of the worst offenders when it comes to visiting friends who are in the hospital or at home. I'm like everyone else, I just don't seem to have time anymore. Most of us find ourselves in the same situation these days. I also think that we who reside here in Haliburton County should stop for a moment and realize that we should not demand faster service from garages, stores, restaurants, banks and service industries. The next time you find yourself in a line-up, why not be a good neighbour and strike up a conversation with the person next to you?

Just a few notes... Mr. and Mrs. Jim Gow of Haliburton have returned home following a trip to England where they attended the funeral of a close relative... We are glad to see Vince Connaughan back home following a short stay in the hospital... Mr. and Mrs. Grant Scheffee of Haliburton spent the weekend at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Michael Scheffee in Oshawa and attended a ball game at the Skydome in Toronto on Sunday.

IF YOU ARE hungry—don't read this column. Particularly if you are on a diet. Unless, of course, you don't like chocolate.

I do know some people who don't like chocolate, but they seem to be in the minority. I can remember from an interview with an ice cream expert that it was the top flavor choice by a long stretch. (Vanilla was second).

As in so many other cases, it is tough to get Canadian statistics, but according to a recent item, total consumption of chocolate in the U.S. was up from 1.76 billion pounds in 1980 to 2.3 billion pounds by 1986 — the last figures available.

More than 84 percent of Americans now are eating chocolate on a daily basis, according to the story, which states that those 2.3 billion pounds work out to 11 pounds for every single person in the country, (and I assume the married ones, too).

Again, I have no way of knowing if this works out to the same proportion in Canada, though many if not most statistical comparisons work that way. But I do have the figure for Europe — where they are said to eat 20 pounds per capita annually!

(I must say this discussion is making me hungry. The only thing I could find in the house were some chocolate sandwich cookies with a peanut butter filling, which were on special at the grocery store recently. They help, but the peanut butter flavor seems to gradually overpower the chocolate on the way by).

Aside from the people who make chocolate bars, if I had to guess, I'd say that Valentine's Day and Easter would be the two biggest occasions for the chocolate business. The former for boxes of assorted filled goodies, the latter for molded items like Easter bunnies and chicks.

I think the most chocolate I ever saw at one time was in the latter category. They were apparently the season's supply for Metro Toronto and the surrounding area from the Smile's and Chuckle's chocolate plant in Kitchener in the early sixties.

Jack Kent Cooke, who had owned CKEY, was so confident that he would win the first private television station licence in Toronto, that he built a big studio for the radio station on Don Mills Road, designed so the walls could be extended and the roof raised to hold the TV studios.

When Cooke was beaten for the TV channel by the Eatons and the Bassetts, he moved back to smaller quarters downtown and planned to sell the building separately from the station.

When we took over from Cooke, we couldn't sell this 'White Elephant' either, so our business manager hired someone to rent it out an office or a room at a time.

That's how a long, narrow room, about 6 by 8 by 25 feet long, with no windows — an echo chamber! — became storage for several thousand Easter Bunnies — an unbelievable sight!

The most fascinating true story I have seen in recent years involving chocolate, (setting aside Canadian comedian Howie Mandel's original claim to fame, which is not suitable for a family newspaper), is the arson case in Scarborough this year.

According to the news item, a 25-year-old receptionist at a factory called 'The Chocolate House' was charged with arson after a fire did $100,000 damage, and left 'a river of chocolate' running out of the factory.

The fire destroyed finished product, molds, wrapping materials, and bulk chocolate in the factory and retail store near Steeles Avenue, according to owner Anya Modselewski.

The owner said "the chocolate comes in big

Poetry's beauty touches all

AS OTHERS SEE IT

Bob Giuliano

A SMALL GROUP of church folks in Mississauga used to meet on Monday nights to try to understand what it is to be human in this modern era. Living the fast pace in such an artificial environment left most folks troubled in spirit and hungry for something that seemed lost. We explored a variety of alternatives and lived critically, sort of on the edge of the strong currents of materialism and consumerism. Technology seemed so all pervasive there that reclaiming human spontaneity and genuine human experience seemed almost hopeless.

One experiment we conducted was to try to listen to poetry. We believed that language was deteriorating into superficial talk of only pragmatic matters. Thus poetry and the Bible had slipped from our lives unnoticed. To read the Bible, to hear its truth, required quiet, reflective attitudes of the heart. To listen to poetry, read is meaning fully, took too much time. We have been taught to analyze poetry rather than respond to its rhythm and message. Analyzing everything, breaking things down into their functioning parts is a mark of the techno-science of our time. Thus the scripture and poetry were gathering dust on the coffee tables of our homes. We were just under too much pressure to listen from deep inside. The inner ear was deaf.

So we announced to the congregation that we would spend a couple of Monday nights reading our favourite poems—an attempt to be invited by the art of words to a dimension of ourselves neglected and lost.

Not more than two or three extra folks showed up for the readings. The usual gang of twenty was there, but not many more. Someone had dimmed the lights, and had flickering candles around the room to enhance our listening abilities. Each by turn read or recited poems treasured in years before. Strangely, no one had favourite poems of the last ten years. Most were memorable works from high school or college English classes. Nevertheless, we hauled them out of our histories and listened again.

One visitor that night turned the tide for us all. Jim was a man in his early sixties. He had worked in a warehouse all of his life. Scared by ugly warts on his face, no one had loved him deeply until he was middle aged. This woman, who saw through the disturbing mask to the beauty within, was now in a deep coma in hospital. The long loneliness of his life had returned.

Jim began to recite poems which he had treasured and put to memory while lugging crates in the warehouse. There were poems which had sustained him in his isolation; poetry that amused and caused a twinkle in his eyes; rhythmic, heart-rendering rhymes that spoke of the often tragic depths of human living brought tears to his eyes; and poetry that spoke of the great courage of the human spirit straightened his back as he recited. The hours sped by.

We listened not only to the poetry but to the man and were humbled by the transparent beauty of his humanity. In the midst of relentless loneliness and suffering and now the great sorrow of his wife's hopeless condition, Jim let the light of poetry illumine our own souls.

It was an unforgettable evening rich in its restorative power. The artificial environment of the city was broken and shattered like so much fragile glass as our spirits surfaced, invited by good, imaginative poetry and recited by a good and genuine man.

Alden Nowlan, the New Brunswick bard of this modern nation wrote: "The poet says, you'll never guess what happened to me last night. I made love to the most beautiful woman in the world. And the eunuch answers, yeah, but what good did it do you? You didn't get paid for it."

Preparing for the big change

NORTHERN LIGHTS

Virginia Muenzel

A BASSWOOD LEAF just floated by my window and landed in amongst the cherry and maple leaves piling up on the west side of the year. The garden is finally done for. The chickens had the last of the Swiss chard for their Thanksgiving feast. The carrots and beets and squash and onions are in the cold room.

Everywhere, the earth and its inhabitants are preparing for the big change. Our cats and dog, like the wilder beasts, have thickening fur and fattened tummies. All the animals are looking for winter nests. The barn is getting crowded once again. It seems this is going to be the year of the chipmunk. They run between our feet every time we go to feed the chickens, or collect the eggs. There's even a pair of sparrows taking life easy in the holding pen. They've found a secret entrance. Now, every morning, when I open the barn door, they greet me from the chicken perch by the front window, just before they fly out over my head.

Another basswood leaf floats by, while smoke curls from the chimneys of homes with wood stoves. Often, kitchens of those homes begin to smell of soups and stews that simmer on the stoves. Comforting, tummy-warming meals we like to eat when we come in from working all day in the yard, tilling gardens, raking leaves, or splitting wood. Getting ready for the big change.

In the sky, great vees of geese fly beneath the threatening clouds. Masses of small birds gather and feed and swarm together, then disappear. Those remaining feed heavily on the seeds of tall grass and weeds. In gales and blizzards, they will nestle with their feathers fluffed in sheltered thickets and pine trees, hoping to make it through the big change.

As the wind sharpens and the trees grow bare, the clouds release a hint of storms to come. Old-timers make their annual winter predictions according to the thickness of the onion skins or the caterpillar fur or some other age-old lore used to presage the severity of the big change.

Meanwhile, on the roads one weekend, trailer loads of motor boats and ATVs, wind surfboards and sailboats head south. Followed the next weekend by another set of trailers going north, all laden down with ski-doo's, skis, helmets, snowsuits, heavy boots and poles. Preparing for the change.

We're never sure exactly how much time we have before it comes. One week, the sunshine sends us into shorts and t-shirts while we dig potatoes. And the next, we hunt up heavy socks and jackets to fend off the sharpness of the wind. Often just when we've resigned ourselves to winter, November comes along and brings us balmy air for several days. And we, along with all the beats, bask in the last special summer sun lethargically storing up its warmth until the arctic sends its frigid front to send us running for the sweaters, toques and mittens we will wrestle with and lose and hunt for, curse their need and bless their existence for all of the duration of the big change.

Finally finding time for thanks

OFF THE RECORD

FOR MANY COTTAGERS, Thanksgiving weekend is a time to rake the leaves, take the boat out of the lake and lock up for the winter.

For this former cottager, it's a time to thank all the people responsible for turning the cottage into a home. This weekend—like most of the weekends this summer—my parents have been working furiously to winterize our cottage so I'll have a cozy place to live as the colder months approach.

My father always joked that I loved visiting our cottage near Minden more than anyone else in the family. When I decided to move up here to work on the Echo, he worried about how his only daughter would fare so far from home.

Since that time he's come to accept that I love living here (despite the long work hours, erratic plumbing, and isolation), and has supported me with all his heart, not to mention his back muscles.

For some, winterizing a cottage might not be such a big job—they would just call whatever handymen and plumbers were necessary to do the work. But my father not only insists on doing it all himself, but as a skilled carpenter and craftsman, everything must be perfect (instead of a little shack to protect the newly dug well, Dad built what looks like a miniature version of our cottage).

My mother certainly isn't one to sit idle, either. Along with all the household duties of cleaning up for company and cooking a turkey dinner this weekend, she worked hard to insulate the waterline, and provide extra insulation underneath the house.

And it was Mom who helped convince my dad that my moving up here would be a good experience in the first place.

A number of new experiences have been opened up to me since moving here. I've learned to handle sitting through five-hour council meetings... I know how to prime a faulty pump... I can manage the half-hour drive home after a 16-hour workday... I'm not too bad at shooting pool... and I've had the opportunity to write more than I ever imagined could be within my limitations.

And through my work on the Echo I have met interesting people who have enriched my life, helped increase my knowledge, and brightened my days.

There are times when I miss living so far from my family in Scarborough. Unfortunately, I couldn't see my brother Klaus, sister-in-law Cathy, and nieces Jessica and Sarah this weekend—what better way to spend a holiday than being tackled by two little girls with sunshine smiles and chocolate fingers?

But Bonnie, my friend and temporary roommate, did cut her visit home in East York short just in time to enjoy a second Thanksgiving dinner at the cottage.

So, looking out the window at the glistening lake surrounded by a warm calico blanket of trees, I know what to be thankful for this weekend.

Artist's life paints fascinating tale

THROUGH THE PERISCOPE

Martha Perkins

MEMORIES ARE VERY SELECTIVE. Instead of providing us with random images, they can be trained to focus on certain times of our lives, ignoring others. This serves as a protective device. It's said that while we can remember being in pain, we will never be able to feel it in all its intensity just by thinking about it. Emotional pain can be just as damaging however, so our memory can also shield us from re-living experiences better left forgotten.

When I was interviewing Ethel Curry, a talented local painter who forged her career at a time most women were staying at home either with parents or husbands, I was very much aware of her mind's self-editing powers. I don't think her adult life was overwhelmingly painful, and I think she was content in the lifestyle she chose for herself. But when you're older, with plenty of time to think about past decisions, you can get on a merry-go-round ride of "What ifs?"

Instead of putting herself through this torment, Miss Curry has opted to keep her memories fixed on her childhood. By all accounts, it was a childhood worth remembering: full of love and caring; rich with experience; and tinged with the innocence only the young manage to retain.

As an interviewer, I'd like to learn more about those other years, but as a private person, I respect Miss Curry's right to keep those years to herself. By agreeing to be interviewed, she's not expecting her life to be exposed to whoever picks up a paper. Besides, interview subjects are entitled to share those things which show them in a complimentary fashion. Would you tell strangers about those quiet corners of the heart?

Still, I must be grateful Miss Curry told me all she did. Her independence of spirit, appreciation of nature and artistic abilities serve as examples for all young women. Young men, too. At 87, she has a lot she can teach us. At 27, she must have been an incredible person to befriend.

Unfortunately, due to space restraints, I wasn't able to talk much about Miss Curry's art, which I feel captures the spirit of pioneer Haliburton with flourish and great talent. She doesn't make fun of the old-fashioned ways, she revels in them. This was the village which gave her so many happy memories, and she returns the favour by giving us images of Haliburton which we can blend in with the memories we're making today. It's this meetings of minds which gives Ethel Curry a permanent role in whatever it is that makes the Highlands so special.

Hillbilly thoughts on an autumn day

DOWN OUR ROAD

Sharon

HE KNEW THEY CALLED HIM a hillbilly. Most of the time he was too busy to think about it, but when he overheard the word while walking down Main Street, he felt resentment rise briefly. It lasted only a second. In his younger days he probably would have made an issue of it. Now he usually just shrugged it off, keeping his opinion to himself.

He knew that label was often used when people dove by a house on a dirt back road or past certain places in town. A couple of dogs outside, one usually a hound; a sad looking vehicle off to the side, tires flat and rust showing; wood dumped in several spots and not piled; paint badly needed on the house and weeds everywhere. He'd seen places like that in the

A TOUGH TIE: Haliburton Junior Redmen soccer team battled to a 2-2 tie against visiting Fenelon Falls last Thursday. The local boys dominated play early but fell to a two-goal deficit at the half.

Haedicke shines despite loss in 3-2 soccer game against Fenelon

Haliburton's senior Redmen soccer team lost a close game to Fenelon Falls last Wednesday, despite a two goal effort by Jan Haedicke.

Haliburton got on the board first on a picture-perfect goal that was set up by Darren Warburton, who crossed the ball neatly into the goal area, where Jan Haedicke was positioned to head it into the net.

Haliburton was unable to protect the lead however, and Fenelon Falls scored late in the half to tie the match.

In the second half Fenelon scored first to take a 2-1 lead, and the situation worsened for the Redmen when Kelly Youngdale was ejected from the game on a red card. The local boys fought back, however, and managed to tie the game at two on Haedicke's second scoring effort of the day.

Haliburton was unable to add another, but Fenelon managed to score late in the match to earn a 3-2 win.

Outstanding players for the senior Redmen were Roland Greber, Darren Warburton, Kelly Youngdale, Jason Dennis and Chris Holliday-Rhodes.

The senior club will be in action this Wednesday in home game against I.E. Weldon.

Juniors tie with Fenelon

The Junior Redmen soccer team displayed good ball control last Wednesday as they battled back from a two goal deficit to tie Fenelon 2-2.

Early in the first half Haliburton's Dave Carr had a number of shots on goal with the wind helping Haliburton to dominate play. Fenelon's goalie made several diving saves to keep his team in the game, however.

Trailing by two goals at the half and with the wind against them, the Redmen's morale was boosted when Dave Carr scored on a penalty kick. The Redmen forward line then made a number of good passes to set up a second goal that tied the game.

Outstanding players for the Juniors were Kevin Buchanan, Nico Haedicke and Jamie Keefer.

INTERCEPTOR: A junior Redmen intercepts two Fenelon forwards during action in Haliburton last Thursday. The team will take on I.E. Weldon Wednesday.

Get your tickets early so you won't be disappointed.

In keeping with local social and economic trends, the Men's Hockey League has experience a bit of a boom recently. The 89/90 season will see no less than eight teams battling it out for that coveted cup. No Andy not yours! Sponsors include Bishop and Wilson Surveyors, Emmerson Lumber, Elstone Motors, Haliburton Lumber and Curry Motors, as well as Youngdale Fuels, Vasey Insurance, and Roberts-Austin Fuels. The M.H.L. welcomes the latter three into the league and sincerely thanks all sponsors for their support.

Through a leaked document which was slipped to me in the alleyway between Stedmans and The Village Shoppe, I have learned that some changes have been made to this year's schedule. There are now eight teams. All games will be played on Sunday nights. First game starts around 4:30 PM and the nightcap begins at 9:00 PM. Two weeks will be missed through Christmas and New Years. Teams will play 14 regular season games and seven post season. Players missing too many regular season games will be ineligible for post season play. If your Aunt Mabel drops in unexpectedly on a Sunday you will be excused as long as you show proof of her visit and a valid Doctor's certificate etc., etc.

So there it is folks. You have been warned. Don't forget Sunday, October 15—be there or be square!

I'm Chip and that was THIS WEEK IN THE M.H.L.

SCORELESS BATTLE: Laura Patton, left, and Nicki Vachon defend a free hit during a league game in Haliburton against Bethany Hills school last Wednesday. The teams battled to a scoreless draw. Haliburton is now tied with St. Peter's for second place. They'll see action again Thursday in Lindsay where they challenge St. Peter's and Lakefield.

Redmen topple their foes in an exciting 21-1 victory

Haliburton's Senior Redmen football team spent three quarters wearing down their visiting opponents from I.E. Weldon, then scored three touchdowns in the fourth quarter to earn an impressive 21-1 victory on Friday.

A strong west wind was a major factor in the game, testing both teams' ability to kick and pass effectively when the wind was against them.

The Redmen had the wind advantage in the first quarter when Weldon elected to receive, and the local boys used it when Jeff Feero booted a single through the endzone.

Both teams were able to move the ball well on the ground, but their passing game suffered in the cold, blustery conditions. The Redmen defensive squad was seriously tested in the second quarter when the visitors had three opportunities to score from inside the five yard line. The local boys hung tough, however, and the best Weldon could manage was a single point to leave the game tied 1-1 at the half.

Weldon took the wind advantage in the third quarter but failed to make the most of it, and were unable to break the tie.

In the fourth quarter the Redmen offense began to click. What proved to be the game-winning touchdown was set up when Jamie Dollo intercepted a Weldon pass on the 40 yard line. The Redmen then began a drive that culminated in a touchdown by Craig Bain. Jeff Feero was good on the convert to give the Redmen an 8-1 lead.

Haliburton held Weldon from advancing on their next possession, and added another touchdown when Sean Perrin threw a 35 yard strike to Brent Flood.

With less than three minutes remaining on the clock, Perrin again hit Flood with a touchdown pass, this time for 15 yards. Feero's convert gave the Senior Redmen a 21-1 win.

The defensive squad got strong play from Jeff Francis and Kyle Hewitt, while Perrin and Flood were the dominant players for the offense.

The seniors will see action again this Friday in Lindsay for their second matchup against LCVI.

A BIG WIN: Haliburton high school's senior Redmen rolled to a 21-1 win over I.E. Weldon on Friday, but it wasn't an easy win. Both teams were hampered by strong winds at various times in the game, and it wasn't until the fourth quarter that the Redmen really got rolling, scoring three unanswered touchdowns.

Juniors squeak by I.E. Weldon team

The Junior Redmen managed to put only one point on the board in their game against I.E. Weldon last Friday, but it was all they needed to win in a match that was dominated by defense.

Both teams were plagued by miscues that negated many of their best offensive opportunities, but the Redmen were still able to move the ball well on the ground. Craig Harding had eight carries for 65 yards, Jay Hughes went 97 yards in four carries and Jerry Cooper racked up 135 yards in 15 carries.

The Redmen fumbled once deep in the Weldon zone, and had a touchdown called back.

The only scoring in the game came when the Redmen's Peter Van Leuween kicked a 25 yard single through the endzone late in the game.

The Junior Redmen will travel to Lindsay on Friday to meet LCVI for the second time this season.

Candy factory fire creates a steaming chocolate river chunks and it melted down all over the place—there was a river of chocolate."

The receptionist was charged with arson, breaking and entering and theft, but we won't know her motive till our overcrowded court system gives her a day in court...

As soon as I read that story, I immediately thought of my favorite chocolate story, which concerns a worker in a chocolate factory which sounds much like the one that had the fire.

It was his job to stand above the giant vat of hot chocolate on a narrow catwalk, and add other ingredients, according to the recipe for what particular product was being made.

One day, while paying careful attention to a new recipe, he missed his footing on the walkway and tumbled into the vat of heated chocolate.

As soon as he surfaced, he began shouting "Fire! Fire!" as loud as he could over the factory noise. He was soon heard and pulled out of the vat.

As soon as he was sure the lad was okay, the foreman asked in an annoyed tone of voice "How come you yelled fire? There wasn't any fire!"

"Yeah," the employee said, "but would anybody have come running here to rescue me if I'd yelled 'Chocolate! Chocolate!'"

FACT OR FALLACY?

Reducing Cholesterol Levels

Once your arteries have begun to clog with fatty deposits, nothing short of surgery will help. This is not entirely true.

FACT: The main cause of fatty deposits clogging arteries is high blood cholesterol levels. Researchers have proved that by lowering your cholesterol levels with careful diet and the use of medication, you can slow the build-up of fatty deposits and, possibly, reduce the deposits.

and the gentle. Just as there have always been those who are disappointed.

Life, almost by definition, is a state of existence filled with choices. We just have to learn to take responsibility for the consequences of the choices we make. One can be cruel, or kind. One can smoke and consume cholesterol with abandon, or jog down country roads until the knee joints collapse. One can be strong and choose to compete among the strong, or one can retreat and moan about the dominance of those who win whatever race happens to be running that day. No one I know of has been forced into a high-pressure career in real estate but, for some, the choice meant the difference between prosperity and poverty. No one of my acquaintance has been forced to have an organ transplant but, for a few, the possibility of such transplants has meant a choice between life and death.

No outside funds means independence

To the Editor:

On behalf of the Haliburton County Studio Tour I would like to thank the Echo for its support. The editorial support we had, in promoting the tour and doing specific articles highlighting artists participating in the tour, was great.

The Haliburton County Studio Tour is funded entirely by participating artists. We receive no government funding and have no intentions of trying to get any. This allows us to be more independent and to make the tour what we think it should be.

This year our tour was an overwhelming success with most studios having in excess of 400 to 500 visitors through in a weekend. Compared with stores in town, this may not seem like a huge number of people, but for most of us it is more traffic than we get in a whole year of weekends.

The 25 stops on the tour represent the livelihood (either full, or part times) of some 35 people and their families. These are jobs that have little or no impact on the environment and enhance the tourist interest in the area. We appreciate the opportunity to sell our products in the area instead of having to count on craft shows hundreds of miles away.

But why not set aside the gloomy ruminations and try for a bit of balance.

Labour-saving devices of the modern world have emancipated women from the drudgery of household chores and given the average man something he has never had as much of throughout history: leisure. Technological progress has freed us to raise the best-educated generation of youngsters who have ever lived, given the average man the ability to travel the world and enlarge his understanding of foreign culture, made possible the conquest of diseases that decimated entire nations not that long ago. Communications technology has shrunk the world to a global village in which it has become easier to share information of technology has made possible the pages of this newspaper on which Mr. Giuliano has the freedom to express his views so I can read them and respond.

Lighten up a bit, Mr. Giuliano. Things aren't as bad as you think they are, and they certainly aren't any worse than they have been all along.

Sincerely,
Laszlo J. Buhasz
Toronto (and Harcourt Park)

So thanks again Echo and let me invite anyone who missed this year's tour to be sure to catch the 1990 studio tour.

city, maybe without the piles of firewood but otherwise much the same. But in the city the word hillbilly wasn't used. It was an attitude a few people had about what they saw in the country. For some, a hound tied up outside was enough to conjure up the word hillbilly in their mind.

Never mind that the ancestors of those 'hillbillies' settled this part of the country long before anyone had air conditioned cars and snowmobiles. Some of those old houses on the dirt roads started out as bustling farmhouses, full of hungry, hard working men sitting around the kitchen table before going back out to work in the fields. The best crop was stones, but they kept at it and their families were always well fed if not fancily dressed.

Maybe the only one staying on in the old house now was an elderly person, a mother who didn't want to leave behind the memories or independence of the old homestead. He knew his own father would never leave the old place and when he dropped by to see the old guy once or twice a week, they sat and talked over strong cups of tea. His father thrived on the conversation. Time spent on outside maintenance meant less time to sit and chat and that's really what the visits were about.

Pulling into the drive, his errands in town complete, he tried to look as his own place with an unprejudiced eye. Over by the balsam was Sam, the best hunting dog in the county, his tail going a mile a minute. He hadn't finished piling next winter's wood yet, but it should be done by Monday. His wife had set out some old clothes and broken furniture to be picked up for the church bazaar. They would be gone by supper time. The old Ford sat awkwardly by the shed, its driving days long gone. But he used it for parts and couldn't care less what others thought of the look of it. The Chevy on blocks beside it was for his son, once he turned sixteen. A new paint job and it would do just fine when the time came.

It was a busy week coming up. They had the pigs and turkeys to do. Most of the birds were already sold, to be put away in city freezers until Christmas. They all said his free-range turkeys were succulent and flavourful, and they appreciate his delivering them in person.

He, his wife, son and a few of the neighbours did the turkeys every year. It was usually a cold, unpleasant job done in late fall. But it was good delivering them because he was paid in cash and some visiting took place at the same time.

Hillbilly. The word still stuck in his mind. He knew of one place on the edge of town that was a real eye-score. The couple who lived there was from Toronto. They moved up thinking life was cheap and easy in Haliburton. The husband hadn't finished high school and had no skills. He got on as a carpenter's helper but didn't like it so he quit. Next came a job cutting wood in the bush but he said the work was too hard, so he quit that too. His wife stayed at home and had two babies before you could turn around. So now they had no money and rented the place where they were living. It was the third one in two years because they kept getting behind in the rent.

A smile crossed his face as he thought of Marvin. Now there was a real hillbilly, God bless him, he thought. Marvin's whole life was spread out in front of the old farmhouse where he lived. Bits of farm machinery, cords or wood, which he sold at a nice profit; a mangy old dog who followed Marvin everywhere and that cat with the broken tail. The shed had a real lean to it so Marvin propped a two-by-four up against it for support. Inside, the kitchen was a disaster; more wood, dishes clean but not put away.

The walls were covered with faded old photos thumb-tacked in place. All Marvin's brothers and sisters were there as well as tourists who had come to depend on Marvin over the years. You could usually catch Marvin around noon and he always had tea or coffee and a plate of sweets to offer. He just loved company. On weekends his place was a mecca for the tourists. They dropped in for his advice on cars, water pumps, teenage offspring and the price of real estate.

Marvin was probably the most hospitable man in the county. Even if he was a hillbilly. He was honest, open and friendly. Sometimes he'd take Sunday off, but usually he just worked day in, day out. He wasn't poor, because he saved everything he made. Lord knows the money didn't go into house repairs. But he was happy with his life and his friends and saw no need to change any of it.

Thinking about Marvin always made him feel good. He changed into his work clothes and headed outside. That wood pile wouldn't get done by itself. His wife was busy making pies for dinner. He hadn't got out the door but the phone rang. Someone over by Boshkung had driven down to their cottage and couldn't get back up because of a washout. Could he come with his tractor right away? The wood would have to wait again. Maybe he'd get it done tomorrow.

Reflections on a painter's past

Ethel Curry looks back to the days of her youth and rediscovers the Haliburton—and the girl—that once was

'I remember the days when...'

by MARTHA PERKINS

Editor

ETHEL CURRY'S MEMORY paints a picture of her childhood which is vibrant and alive with images of the people she loved, and the times she shared with them. A tummy ache from eating too much licorice, walks through the winter wood with her father, holding the horses while her mother harnessed them; all are as real today as they were 80 years ago.

As the memory is asked to recall images more recent—studying with the Group of Seven when most women were content to stay at home, forging a career for herself asking help from no one, accepting her single state instead of babysitting grandchildren—the vibrancy fades. That's just the way things were, she says. You didn't think about them then, and you don't think about them now.

It's like her painting which hangs on the wall of her room at Extensicare in Haliburton. She vividly remembers the dusk she spent waiting for her ride, the setting sun picking up the autumn colours of the trees in front of her, a subdued light emanating from the lake, and the far hills sheathed in a dark blanket. Captivated by the play of light and darkness, all other thoughts were lost in brushing paint against canvas. The quiet of that 1930's scene flows gently through the years.

But the painting has faded, Miss Curry says. Age does that to paint—it yellows and darkens it. The painter can recall its days of brightness, but the viewer sees the muted version. In that way, the true painting stays the possession of the artist, no matter who owns it.

Full circle

Life has a way of coming full circle. Eighty-seven years old, still yearning to do things but finding her body unable, Miss Curry can find comfort in the past. It was a time when no decisions had to be made, a time when time was your own; there's no point thinking about what you would do differently as an adult because you can't change anything, can you?

So as you get older, you go back to those years which remain just the same as your memory paints them.

Ethel Curry was born in a little log cabin between Irondale and Bark Lake, just when the berries were ripening and the sun's warmth was being soaked into the gardens and souls of the village: June 29, 1902.

She was the first born for William Curry (later called W.R. because there was another Bill Curry) and Jessie Ellen Barr, both of Irondale, though the Currys would settle in Haliburton and the Barrs in Gooderham. A few years later, a brother, Ron, would arrive, and then a sister, Elizabeth Viola (Vic Bishop.)

"After my parents were married, they went out West like everyone else but a year and a half later, when my mother was expecting me, they moved back. I was christened at St. John's in Irondale."

Maternal grandparents were Elizabeth and Peter Barr. "He had straight black hair and brown eyes—mother had all his colouring." On her father's side were Cassie (Catherine) and Ab (Andrew) Curry. "Their youngest child, (the late Kitty Baker), was only a year older than I... He died when I was in my teens. I think it had something logging."

"My father was nine years old when he started to work in the logging camps as a chore boy," she says as she begins the tale of the next generations. "He came from a large family (and that was expected of him.) When I was four, we moved to Miskwabi where my father was cook in a lumber camp. Our cabin was just a tiny little thing with bunks in it."

"I can remember watching my father make pies and shoot them down this long table. There were big bags of white sugar and flour in the kitchen and pigs were hanging around the back. We did have a cutter and sleigh because I can remember going for rides. We'd have a cardboard box with bricks (heated in the stove) in it to keep our feet warm."

The next summer, the family moved to Haliburton. "When we left there to come here, we came behind a steam boat with a raft behind it. I was taking care of the cow and my small brother."

"The main street had wooden sidewalks and cows wandering down the street, and on the hills. Everyone who wanted milk had at least two cows. We kept the milk in big pans which went down in the basement and the cream would rise to the surface (to be scooped up and poured over fruit or made into ice cream.)"

A move to the big house

"The village was very small and all the stores—Anderson's and Gorrie's—were separate, not connected like they are now. And there was a train then which went out at six in the morning and got to Lindsay at nine."

The first house was rather small, but then they moved to the corner of Highland and Pine Streets, where her grand-nephew and his family live today. "I think my father worked in the Grand Hotel for a while" but when they moved, W.R. opened a livery next door to the house, providing horses for the travelling salesman who'd arrive by train and then travel by buggy or cutter to the neighbouring villages. (Haliburton was the end of the CNR line, although the I.B.&O. travelled through Irondale and Gooderham.) He also had teams of work horses, who'd help him log the forests every winter.

"There were all kinds of sleighs," Miss Curry says of the popular modes of transportation. "Sometimes there were hand-made ones. I remember one which had a long board and one sleigh at each end. There was a person steering in the front and also one at the back, pushing with his foot. I was 12 when we got the first Ford, one that had a top which was collapsible. When it rained, it wasn't the driest place in the world."

"My mother thought women should be able to do the things men do. When my father wasn't there and someone needed their horses harnessed, she would do it and I would help her.

"Childhood is very import," she concludes. "We were a happy family but we had our own responsibilities."

When asked to describe what Haliburton was like for a child growing up before the First World War, Miss Curry says "It was a wonderful childhood."

"Children had to make their own fun. We had no radio and we had coil oil lamps. I can't remember being bored. I've never been bored if I've been free to do something."

None of the children had much money, so when asked what she'd spend a nickel on at the store, Miss Curry says "You never got a nickel, you got a cent... But I did get 25 cents once."

"Across Head Lake (by Walling's former dairy) there was a farm where they used to grow strawberries. They'd pay you a cent for each box you picked and we got to spend the money any way we wanted. Of course we'd spend it before we got home."

"On the day I earned 25 cents picking strawberries, I went to the store (which is now Bank's Heritage Store.) I spent it all on licorice bars and I remember being very sick by the time I got home. I've never liked licorice since."

"In the springtime, we went out and picked dandelions," she says, forming a vee with her index finger and the next to show how they picked just the heads. "You put them in a crock to make dandelion wine and if you left it to ferment, it was quite alcoholic. But we'd drink it fresh."

School was taught in a small building on Victoria Street, site of the present day school. "There were only two rooms, one for the junior grades, one for the seniors. One of my teachers was Miss Leith."

"I liked school but I liked drawing the best and they wouldn't let me do it all the time." So she knew she was artistic, even at a young age? "I just liked to make things. It didn't matter whether it was a dress or something on paper. I took a sewing a pattern making course through the mill so when I was 18, I could make my own dresses, and dresses for my sister.

"The village library was one little room in the town hall, on the first floor on the north-west side, right next to the hill. Next to this room was the place for people who got too happy on a Saturday night. They had one cell where he could sober up.

"There was a skating rink, but it used to be down by the river, more or less where the bridge is. We'd play hockey on the lake before the snow came but we couldn't do that unless our father came with us.

"We had a rowboat on Kushog Lake (Kashagawigamog) and there were boathouses lining the shore, each one holding the other up. Sometimes we'd bring homemade ice cream with us, and eat it during the ride.

Pike poles and log drives

"There were log drives in the spring. I remember men with pike poles that had a reverse hook on the end and they'd push the logs. The logs would come down from East Bay—there was a mill just by the bridge in Haliburton, west of the Curry's house — and sometimes they got caught in the rapids. They'd have to blow it up to break the jam.

"My father wasn't much of a business man in the sense of keeping track of everything, but he was creative. So when he retired from the garage, he built a small mill, just past Dover's Spring. Up there a half mile. He even had a small blacksmith's shop. He got small trees and was going to reforest the area around the mill, but I don't think that worked out."

If her paintings are to be the judge, Ethel Curry's happiest times were spent in the woods, and there's a particular reverence for her father's logging work. Later, when she built a cabin on East Bay, Drag Lake, she'd often go into the woods to find scenes to paint. She was never frightened.

"What was there to be scared of? The animals wouldn't hurt you. I needed nature. Most people want to walk and chatter but you've got to be quiet in the woods to see anything. My father worked in the woods and I was always with him. We'd have an ax for cutting down trees to make a trail, so we could find our way back again. At that time, the country wasn't populated to the extent it is now."

(In a 1950 Globe and Mail review, Pearl McCarthy writes: "Ethel Curry has remained a daughter of the timber country. she can go out from her cabin on a black night without a flashlight and make her way through the bush, across a stream to the spring for water, following a path from which a greenhorn might stray in daylight.

"But it is not merely this familiarity with a terrain which makes her painting valuable and so different from that of many painters who end up with a kind of platitudinous symbolism of Canadian landscape forms. She devoted weeks one year to pencil sketching of the movement of waters, and as any waterman knows, each lake or river has its own peculiar water countenance. If she puts in a driftwood stump, it never looks as if it were merely selected to give the picture diagonals, and yet he would be neither artist nor a woodsman who thought it only photogenic. The artist mentality, inquiring for form, is combined with an ardent love of the country to make her draughtsmanship very good indeed."

And Miss Curry's fond recollections of the past apparently have been part of her psyche for years. Much of the article is devoted to Miss Curry's childhood, and in particular, her father: "Her earliest recollections are of sitting between her father's knees.

"... Ethel Curry's father is part of the art story because he gave his daughter her woodsman's background and because his kindness and appreciation mean much to the artists who care for his country. They in turn love his way of looking at a tree and saying: 'Beautiful, beautiful timber.' His woods lore is almost legendary. They swear he can come on a camp where supplies have run out and make a Ritz dinner out of mouldy flour and a candle end.")

Artists usually have a different way of seeing things, a colour, a shape, a mood. Their eyes and hearts are open to what is around them. "I just enjoyed looking at everything. When people talk about God, nature's God Himself. He's not up in some golden palace."

The decision to go to high school seems more as a way to keep her Curry grandparents company than a desire to have young Ethel continue her graduation. In those days, once a student passed her entrance exam (approximately Grade 8) there were no other local opportunities for schooling. The closest high school was in Lindsay, and that's where the elder Currys lived. They were getting old and frail and needed someone to be with them. As it was, Mr. Curry died in the summer when young Ethel was at home and she returned to live with her grandmother, doing the housework before her homework. Mrs. Curry died a short time later and Ethel boarded with the Oswald family on Sussex Street for $4 a month.

Book work was not as appealing as being creative for young Ethel, who would sometimes get frustrated with her lessons and retreat into a small room in the high school. "My background in English wasn't adequate and I realized I didn't know what to do about it. So in my spares I would go up to this little room and draw. There was a little angel I'd draw in every position and I'd draw pictures from the magazine, although I'd change the way they were standing. I'd never copy something straight out of the magazine.

Shortly after he moved his family to Haliburton, W.R. Curry built this house on the corner of Pine and Highland Streets. (To the left would be the United Church) From here, W.R. operated his livery from the large barn, and when cars arrived, he opened one of the first garages. Logs made their way down the Drag River to the mill which would be in the foreground of this picture. Sometimes the logs would jam and dynamite was used to get them moving.

"One time the inspector came up and found me drawing. He said I should go someplace where they teach people to draw."

To a teenager who grew up in a place where the Group of Seven came to paint, but no one knew who the Group of Seven were, this did not seem to be a practical option. Instead, young Ethel came home and went to work in the family business. "I tried to work at the garage, which used to be where the Red and White (ValuMart) is. But I was no good at typing. I preferred practically anything to typing."

It's at this point the memories begin to fade. They're there, but you have to dig for them, prodding beneath the vague shadows to find sources of colour. The stories become shorter, except for brief bursts of detail.

She enrolled at Peterborough's Normal School, where she took her one-year teacher's training before returning home. Victoria Street School was in the midst of being built, so she taught the youngsters at the old Presbyterian church. She also started the first Canadian Girls in Training (CGIT) corps.

"I made $900 a year, though money went a lot further then. The war had just ended and I-know I stayed at home because you were supposed to."

Cardiff teachers beat their students... in a soccer game

Despite the sign proudly displayed by this student of Cardiff Elementary School, the outcome of last Friday's soccer game between the teachers and students wasn't so good. The teachers won 4-3.

SENIOR LEAGUE by Winnifred Barnum

Here I am again. Thursday the Kimmount Legion Auxiliary Ladies provided a lovely lunch and a beautiful birthday cake for the 10 residents who had birthdays in September. We had them at a table in the centre of the auditorium, tastefully arranged with the cake and flowers. The eight ladies and two men were all present including the two ladies who were 100 years old in September. After lunch we had a sing song with Doris playing the piano.

In the evening we had bingo with Roger Yearwood calling for us. It was his first time to call and he did well. Thank you Roger for giving us a happy evening and using your off time to entertain us.

Verna Jarvis had Mr. and Mrs. Don York of Sunderland and Mr. and Mrs. Frand Masson of Peterborough to visit her.

Friday afternoon was happy hour. The entertainment was piano music by Marion Irwin. Thank you Marion for making the happy hour so enjoyable.

Saturday Tryphina Jenkins had a birthday party downstairs in the resident's area with several of her family present to celebrate her 99th birthday which is Tuesday October 3, 1989.

Mr. and Mrs. William

Stewart of Cameron visited Verna Jarvis on Sunday. They are going to Vancouver for a month's vacation.

Sunday night Rev. John Burgess conducted the Chapel service and we were very pleased to have Heather Bowman play the music on her guitar as well as sing with us. Heather also sang two beautiful hymns. Thanks Heather for spending the little time you have home helping us.

Evelyn Coleman came Monday for our hour of Bible study (Luke chapter 18). We sincerely thank her.

Sunday my sister May and Roy Cameron came from Peterborough and took me out for dinner. I was so glad to see them.

Monday was Resident Council again: Terry called to take me out so Pearl Lyle ably took my place at the council.

In the evening Mr. and Mrs. Marion showed us three films: "Animals in Australia", "High Wide West", and "Island of Hawaii". They were very good and the attendance was better with 13 present. Thank you both very much.

Mable Buttery had her sister Ruth Kellett to visit her this week.

Tuesday we had fun and fitness in the morning then Doris and Linda and Donna took a bus load of Residents to see the coloured leaves. We drove down around Halls Lake, into Hawk Lake and home via Highway 35. The trees are really beautiful this fall.

Wednesday morning instead of fun and fitness we had a bus ride up the Bobcaygeon Road, Vankoughnet Road, Carnarvon and home on 35. Everyone enjoyed both trips very much.

Tuesday night Everi Fearrey and Terri Lynn provided us with singing and guitar music. We appreciate having them very much.

Wednesday night Pastor Murray from Allsaw held a service in the main lounge, enjoyed by the residents.

Past warden recovering COBOCONK NEWS by Sheila Lake

Doris Winchester came home on Wednesday Sept. 27 from St. John's Convalescent Hospital after a lengthy stay. Doris went to hospital in Lindsay last May when she suffered a fractured hip. While in Ross memorial she fractured the other hip. Her many friends in the area are happy to know the one-time Victoria County Warden is doing well and just so thrilled to be home with her sister Muriel and their two dogs. As Doris says "I lost the entire summer!"

Winners in the Cobocok Seniors card games on Oct. 4 were: Euchre: Marjorie Lee, Ada Handley, Marjorie Lee, June Handley, Adrian Lee, Laurie Barkwell, Laurie Barkwell and Jack Sim, Clair Fielder. Bridge: Colin Anderson, Beryl Wright, Carol Anderson.

Burnt River seniors were guests of the Cobocok club on Tuesday night and there were 14 members who visited Coby.

Mrs. Olive Bryant and Mrs. Betty Moore visited Rev. Larry Moore and family in Saskatoon, Sask. recently and had a good time with the grandchildren.

Sympathy to the family of Merle Campbell and Jack Bunting who passed away this week. Jack made his home with Grace and the late Jack Ryan. Merle Campbell was a Norland native, who lost her husband just two months ago.

Mrs. Pearl Brohm of Norland was a Tuesday lunch visitor with Mrs. Cora Lake.

I enjoyed a visit with Claire Brooks of Lutterworth Pines, Minden, she was on her way to visit Betty and Ray Hawker on Tuesday on the Glenarm Road, and all were headed out to Peterborough to celebrate Betty's birthday.

KINMOUNT NEWS by Millie Moss

Well folks, here I am again, finally out from the trailer and into the house although not completely settled yet it shouldn't take long.

Merle Campbell of Norland has been in and out of Ross Memorial Hospital a number of times recently and we're all pulling for you Merle.

Sincere sympathy goes out to the families and many friends of Mary Phillips of Fenelon Falls, formerly of Kinmount, Ken Gardiner of Kinmount and Mr. Black of County Road 1, R.R.1 Kinmount, who passed away in the past few weeks. They will be sadly missed.

Congratulations to Les and Ada Thomas of R.R. 1 Norland, who recently celebrated their sixty-third wedding anniversary.

Kudos to Cuthbert Lamb who took first prize for his pickled onions and wild grape jelly at one of our local fairs.

Happy birthday wishes to Audrey L. Belanger on October 29, and Lorie Lyn Liscombe of Toronto on October 31.

On Wednesday October 18 at 7:30 PM the Salvation Army is sponsoring an Interdenominational Womens Rally at Lakeside Baptist Church in Haliburton. The special speaker is Major Betty Barnum, who was born and raised in Haliburton.

Major Barnum entered the Toronto College for Officer Training in 1963 from the Northern Ontario Corps of Haliburton.

Since her commissioning she has become a Registered Nurse and subsequently spent many years of her officership on the mission field.

The Major left Canada in 1974 to train in midwifery at the Mother's Hospital (A Hospital in London, England). Following a short appointment at the Health Lodge of the International Training College in London, she was appointed to the Singapore and Malaysia Command. There the Major held appointments at Batang Melaka as Corps Officer and Nurse-in-charge, and Ipoh and Singapore Children's Homes and Superintendent at the Singapore Home for the Aged. She also spent two years in youth work and as Editor of the War Cry in Singapore.

Following a short spell on Territorial Headquarters in Canada, the Major returned to Singapore and was appointed Secretary for Field Affairs and subsequently Training College Principal from which appointment she returned to Canada in September, 1987.

Her next appointment was at the Toronto College for Officer Training as a Training officer immediately prior to her present appointment as the National Secretary for Women's Ministries.

COUNTY LIBRARY NEWS

by Joel Levis

CIRCUS DELIGHTS will be just the thing for the kid in all of us as Roy Campbell takes control.

As Master of Ceremonies, Roy has been entertaining audiences for ten years and combines traditional circus skills with magic and song.

The show is for young and old alike with strong attention given to non-stop audience participation. Kids are encouraged to ask whatever questions may come to mind and invariably discover that some of these age-old skills are not entirely beyond their grasp!

Together the children and performer discover the circus unicycle and its secrets, marvel at two mysterious dice vanish into thin air, venture out on a dangerous lion hunt, learn to juggle, witness the incredible balancing eggs, and join in raucous musical choruses. Every performance includes a special appearance by a surprise "guest star".

There will be two performances on Monday, October 16, 1989. One will be held at 1:30 PM at the Royal Canadian Legion in the Village of Haliburton on behalf of the Dysart Branch. The other has been scheduled for 9:30 AM at the new Dorset Community Centre on behalf of the Sherborne Branch.

Everyone is welcome at either or both performances and there is no charge for admission.

Programs are held by the Haliburton County Public Library on behalf of the Ministry of Culture and Communications. Remember the Haliburton County Public Library, serving you since 1965!

"We'll be there when you need us."

"YOU SAY GM BUILDS A BETTER FULL-SIZE PICKUP. OK. SELL ME."

A small business can profit from making the right choice in a full-size pickup. General Motors says that that pickup is a Chevy or a GMC. The trucks more people lean on. Will the facts that sold them sell you?

THE MOST STANDARD POWER YOU CAN GET

Everything else being equal (it's not), why choose anything less than the most standard horsepower you can get? Choose a GM pickup and you'll get 160 horsepower with its advanced 4.3L Vortec V6. You'll also get throttle-body EFI, a simpler and, therefore, more reliable type of fuel injection than multi-port.

The Vortec V6 has a serpentine accessory drive belt that eliminates multiple replacements for up to 140,000 kilometres or more. All service is a snap in fact. The engine compartment is cleanly laid out with logically arranged components and see-through reservoirs.

BUILT TO DELIVER YEARS AND YEARS OF SERVICE

In Chevys and GMCs you'll find double-wall construction of the cargo bed sidewalls and tailgate. Single-piece stampings for the door frames and roof door hinges that are robotically welded - not bolted - onto the door frames. Techniques like these add up to tight, precise fit everywhere.

Chevys and GMCs boast GM's most extensive anti-corrosion measures ever. All major body panels, except the roof, are two-sided galvanized steel. And the box floor and front panel are one piece, eliminating seams and mounting holes where rust could start.

A better pickup is one that will stand the test of time.

TRUCKS THAT ARE A PLEASURE TO WORK WITH

Power and durability are important, but a truck's ability to get the job done increases with how easy it is to work with, too.

In GM pickups, wide doors and low floors make entry and exit easier. Interiors are roomy. Seatbacks have been precisely angled for maximum comfort. The steering wheel and pedals are positioned so that drivers of different sizes will be comfortable. Visibility is spectacular with expansive, tinted glass all around.

Daytime running lights are standard for 1990.

A single, extended range fuel tank means just one fill-up port to deal with now. You can stack two loads, each in its own place, with two-tier loading. And the spare tire conveniently winds down from a frame-mounted winch. (GM's comprehensive warranty now covers tires.)

THE RIDE SELLS IT ALL

GM pickups are built around a massive all-welded frame that tapers toward the rear. This exclusive design allows extra long, variable-rate multi-leaf rear springs and a fully independent front suspension with stamped lower control arms. The net result is an exceptionally smooth ride, loaded or unloaded.

Available GVWRs, by the way, range from 2350 kg. (5200 lbs.) to 4536 kg. (10,000 lbs.) in 1/2-Ton, 3/4-Ton, and 1-Ton models.

Computer-controlled, GVWR-matched rear-wheel anti-lock braking is standard. A smooth ride will include smooth, stable stopping, even with a full load, on slippery or loose surfaces.

Are you sold yet? That's unlikely. But feature for feature, you've got to be swayed in the end by the trucks more people lean on. For a GM truck brochure, or SmartLease™ information, please call 1-800-465-3273.

THIS WEEK

Veteran re-lives his army days in scenic Temagami

WEST GUILFORD NEWS
by Eleanor Cooper

Grenville Stamp has been in Haliburton for this beautiful season of colour. He was in Haliburton Hospital for a week, but home with the family for supper and the evenings. He enjoyed a drive to Huntsville and to Kennis during his days around home. Dan MacKenzie has been undergoing surgery in Peterborough hospital recently. Best wishes go out for complete recovery. On Friday, Petra Pequegnat, Earl and I, Cecelia and Murray Scott attended Edna Bice's funeral in Kearney. As you will see in another part of the Echo, St. Andrews Church was filled on Sunday as we witnessed the dedication of the new window in memory of Mark and Jane Sisson. Holly, Vivian, Ina, May, Carl, Max, Don, Brant, and Ray were all able to be present. It was such a joyous time, albeit touched with sadness at the memory of the brothers and sister who are now gone from our presence: Andy, Ida, and Calvin whose wife, Phrona especially felt the loss on such an occasion. The beauty of the stained glass will be a delight to the soul as well as to the eye of all who worship there. Thanks to Wendy Ladaurantaye for the skill and care with which she created a gift fit for dedication to God. All of May Horsely's family was present: Marion Barry, Lee Henderson, Lynn Henderson, and Nila Cowen. In my corner of the forest, all of our children were home except Andy. Beth was accompanied by her friend Terry Cebelus of Connecticut. They became acquainted in Finland when both girls were Rotary youth exchange students. Paul, Ian, and Jaro were home with Sid and Louise Cooper. Ruth Dobson and Betty Cooper were guests at Elva Cooper's. John and Judy Henderson were with Rod and Jean. Nora Morrison was down from Laurentian University for the weekend. Doug Johnson and Esther Cooper were home at Joan and Basil's, too! Norma and Ray had Kristine and Tessa, and Peter and Sasha Cole home for the holiday. Our heartfelt sympathy to Dorothy and Donna in the sudden death of Morris Jones, dear husband and father, on Saturday, October 7. Murray Scott spent a few days recently in the Temagami area renewing memories of places and friends he knew when he was stationed there in his army years. Eileen Stamp and Robin Woodcock had a few days to themselves in Oshawa and Ajax on the weekend. Grant is away moose hunting. More about that next week. Arthur and Myra Barry have had Thanksgiving with Nada and Lyle MacKay in Huntsville. Pat Smyth of Toronto spent the weekend with Iris Gibbon, Brenda was able to be home for the holiday too.

Sympathy of the Branch is extended to the family of Bill Foote. A Legion memorial service will Philip and Eileen Card of Keswick, Amy and Larry Coker of Uterson were recent guests at the Pyke and Graham homes in Norland.

Some 52 folks sat down to a pot luck dinner on Thursday, September 28 at the Norland Community Hall. Grace was offered by Gus Boyd and introductions of the Norland and area Seniors Club Officers and Executive took place. Gordon Kidd of Lindsay spoke on hearing aids and Jane Porter from the Public Health Unit in Lindsay gave a talk on the flu vaccine. The beautiful quilt that took first prize at the Kinmount Fair was on display as well as the lovely afghan by Hilda Chynoweth, also a prize winner. Both these items will be raffled to some lucky winners at the New Years Dance.
Many enjoyable Thursday afternoons are held at Norland Community Hall with lots of crafts being made for future sales. Everyone is welcome to join in, each Thursday from 1-4 PM.
The Norland W.E. celebrated its sixtieth anniversary and annual grandmother's party on Wednesday, September 13. It was a very nice evening.
A "How to talk so kids will listen" parenting course of children 3-12 will be held. Topics discussed: alternatives to punishment, helping to deal with their feelings, engaging cooperation, independence and praise. The course runs from October 5 to November 16 from 7:30 PM-9:30 PM at the Norland Library. For further information call Enza Suckling at 454-8467.
I was sorry to hear Roy Bryant, Hilda Buxcey, Thelma Saunders and Mrs. Nickaluck have been ill recently and trust all are back to good health by now.
Sympathy to Glen and Grant Campbell, all the family and friends of Merle Campbell of Norland who died at Ross Memorial Hospital in the morning of Wednesday, October 4. Merle had been ill for some time and had been in and out from hospital many times in the last months.
I enjoyed hearing Laura Gaunt of Head Lake speaking, on Radio Station C.K.L.Y. in September.

Marjorie Madill
The Gooderham and area lost a beloved resident of over 60 years with the passing of Marjorie Madill, Sept. 29 at the Haliburton Extensicare. Death came as a release after almost five years of suffering from Alzheimer's disease. Marjorie (nee Lancaster) was born in Peterborough but moved to Bobcaygeon at an early age. After receiving her education here she attended North Bay Normal School. She came to Bear Lake in 1926 where she taught for two years. In 1928 she married Walter Madill who farmed in the Bear Lake Settlement. This was no easy job in those pioneer times. To them were born two children Robert and Margaret. In 1944 she resumed her teaching career in the home school where she taught for eleven years. With the closing of this school in 1955, she was transferred to the school at Gooderham where she remained until her retirement fifteen years later. Her many friends remembers her as a quiet, unassuming lady of sterling character. She was a kind, efficient and dedicated teacher always concerned about the best interests of her pupils. Her artistic talents were well-known and displayed in many ways as well as in the beautiful quilts admired by all those who saw them. Those who knew her well will recall her keen sense of humor and the twinkle in her eyes as some amusing anecdote was told. She was a faithful secretary of the Glamorgan Senior Citizens' Club from the time of its formation until she was forced to relinquish this office due to her illness. A large number of relatives, friends and former pupils gathered at the Gooderham United Church on Monday afternoon to pay tribute to one who was loved by all who knew her. Rev. Maurice Bradley brought words of comfort to the sorrowing family. Interment took place in the Glamorgan Cemetery. Pall bearers were her five grandsons and a nephew. Surviving are: her husband, Walter; son, Robert; daughter, Margaret; six grandchildren, six great-grandchildren, and a sister, Mildred.

THE HEART FACTS

Q. What are some of the major signs of a heart attack?

A. Physical signs include chest discomfort, fatigue, nausea, sweating and shortness of breath. The most important factor to watch out for is a psychological one, denial—not admitting that you could be having a heart attack. If you have any of these symptoms, you should tell someone and seek help right away. It could save your life!

Group of Seven teachers stress individuality

Teaching, however, had lost some of its appeal. "In the older grades, most children seemed to be in school just because they had to be. It wasn't very long before I decided I would do something else too. Maybe I needed a change anyway."

By this time, young Ethel was supporting herself financially and this gave her the opportunity to make her own decisions, independent of her parents' wishes. "They would have rather I married as all nice, young, proper women do. I had other abilities so I just chose them. But it was hard. I was just independent. There was no one to keep me and I just wanted to be an artist."

A dream unfolds

From here, we will slip from Miss Curry's memory to the pages of Nila Reynolds history of the Highlands arts guild, Dream of Excellence.

"A chance selection of a Summer School course from the Ontario College of Art held in a quaint Port Hope mill brought Miss Curry in contact with landscape instructor J.W. Beatty, an outspoken critic of student efforts who opted for pure colours. 'Don't fiddle and mess until you make scrambled eggs!' he lectured."

"Miss Curry, totally unfamiliar with oils, took him literally when she painted a grouping of trees and a stone pile rather than the open countryside. She used strong colours in a way which made Beatty roar 'Who is painting like Tom Thomson?'"

"Miss Curry admitted to the canvas but was moved by curiosity to ask, 'Who is Tom Thomson?'"

"Beatty, one of the earliest artists painting in Algonquin Park and closely associated with Thomson and his companions was certainly in a position to provide a good answer. Possibly his explanation and the total summer experience influenced Ethel Curry's decision to attend the Ontario College of Art that fall with 150 other freshmen. Only 12 of the number eventually graduated and aided by scholarships, Ethel Curry was one of them."

Many of her teachers were, from the contemporary critics' point of view, from the "hot mush" school of art. That is, instead of painting pastoral or salon scenes in the greatest of British traditions, these men—and a very few women—painted Canada as they saw it. Lines became blurred as the overall image took over and swamps were just as paint-worthy as golden fields of wheat. Today, their work is revered and is so familiar, becomes a symbol of what is Canadian.

"They encouraged you to do it the way you wanted to. We took drawing, painting, design, life drawing, and each one was progressive. You were always drawing and using paints of some kind. There again, you weren't told exactly how to do it. You were given certain things and told how you could use them."

"On Saturdays, I worked with the Saturday morning classes at the Toronto Art Gallery (now the Art Gallery of Ontario) that Arthur Lismer started."

"Lismer was a wonderful teacher and he encouraged you to use your own initiative because some people just copied other things. All the men were quite different in personality and he was very interested in letting children do it the way they wanted to—children's drawings are very often beautiful things."

At the same time, Miss Curry was studying music at the University of Toronto's conservatory. "I had a very strong voice" which she had begun to develop in Haliburton and wanted to explore further in Toronto. (She and her sister had also studied piano in Kinmount, but violin lessons in Lindsay were not successful.) It was a time of pursuing everything which her curiosity found of interest.

Her rented room in a rambling house at Bloor and Spadina Streets was a popular gathering place because it was so large. Fellow students would come to talk about art, and on Saturday afternoons, they would go to the five o'clock symphony performances. In the winter, they might put on their cross country skis and tour the university grounds.

When asked to describe what these heady days were like for a young girl who had grown up in a village where professional artists, symphonies and independent women were unheard of, Miss Curry's memory is vague.

"I was just something that happened and I was part of it. I didn't think of it."

Once more, to fill in the shadows we'll turn to Mrs. Reynolds' Dream of Excellence:

Miss Curry's talk of the hills of home often enticed her teachers, fellow students, and later her own students, to join her on her forays into the Highlands' woods.

"They were met at the station by horse-drawn vehicles—buggies or cutters ajangle with musical strings of bells chiming on the harnesses of prancing steeds," writes Mrs. Reynolds. "They did not come in summer although pestilent insect swarms could not have deterred them had the scene beckoned. In summer there is little variance in shadings of green which reflect less dramatically a day's progressive changes in lighting. There are few contrasts in comparison with those of autumn or spring when Haliburton's glory drew artists north to capture it with palette and brush. Winter held no terrors! A hard breed, they worked in the open when the mercury fell far below zero. Up at 7 a.m., breakfast at 8 and by 9 a.m., they could be painting. Since every hour was precious, they took lunch with them and worked into the afternoon. As Miss Curry comments, 'When paint freezes you can produce interesting effects.'"

"Ethel Curry particularly recalls her first car trip to Haliburton in the late 20's at Easter time with classmate Doris McCarthy. North of Fenelon Falls, the road detoured across a frozen lake which was marked with cut evergreen. When the girls later drove south this ice highway had become a gaping expanse of open water. The alternative muddy land track was navigated with the help of kind-hearted farmers who hauled the car through mud holes with their teams.

"Miss Curry's friendship with Doris McCarthy (later an instructor in Central Technical School's Art Department) has been durable. Through changing seasons, they have shared sketching excursions, sometimes under canvas, from the Gaspe Coast to the Rockies. Both did post graduate work and studied abroad during various sabbaticals; both exhibited in juried and group exhibitions in Canada and abroad...

Reflecting a northern heritage

"Ethel Curry never lost touch with her northern heritage; the wilderness was at all times her true home and her life's work. She once devoted weeks of her precious painting time to pencil sketching the movements of water on a particular stretch of river. As the late J.W. Beatty once remarked, 'There's that Curry making everything feel north country again! I believe that I could set a Biblical subject and it would turn out with a northern setting.' Globe and Mail columnist Pearl McCarthy in 1950 spoke of an Ethel Curry Exhibition at Woodsworth House thus: 'It can be warmly recommended for many of her small landscapes are extremely good, highly intelligent but quite unaffected with strong decision and refined colour.'"

"Other people thought I should paint more but I didn't have time," Miss Curry says, looking back to those exhibition days. Sometimes she'd have solo shows, but when the OCA had its exhibits, she remembers always being put beside A.J. Casson—Casson and Curry, neighbours in the alphabet. One of her paintings was requested by a New York City art gallery.

Although she was accepted at the college, becoming a full-time artist was next to impossible when she graduated in 1930. "Freelancing was a pretty shaky thing, especially for a woman. They didn't want to give women jobs in commercial studios either. Their excuse was women just worked for a while and left to get married. But I had no intention of doing that."

A compromise was found by becoming the art teacher at Toronto's new high school, Northern Secondary. (St. Clair was on the outskirts of the city and nearby farms were fodder for painting classes.) Painting was an extra-curricular interest which she pursued when the sculpting, commercial design and ceramics courses were over.

Time restraints meant she had to stop freelancing, but compensations were found in her work. "I enjoyed the teenagers. I don't think they were difficult at all. They were doing something they wanted to do."

One summer, Miss Curry went to Europe with a young woman, Alison Grant, who was Vincent Massey's niece. Memories of that European summer have also faded, and she does not mention the year spent on the Spanish island, Ibiza.

These years are glazed over, just as the years after her retirement in 1967 are. Miss Curry returned to Haliburton to be close to her family, which now included the children of her niece, Sheila Pople, and nephew, Peter Curry. She delighted in the children's company, always able to unlock the doors to their imaginations.

Young at heart is an often-used expression but it is particularly apt when describing Miss Curry. Youthfulness—the joy of discovery, the pursuit of knowledge, the eagerness to try new things—remained with her long past her days of childhood.

And as she grows older, her own days of youth become more important. Indelibly printed on her memory, those years of innocence have a purity which withstands the pressures of time. Even her art is less important to her as her hands are unable to hold a brush steadily.

"It doesn't matter anymore," she says when asked the interviewer's favourite question "If you could do things over again, what would you change?"

"You can't change things anyway," Miss Curry continues. "Sometimes things don't work out the way you want them to and there's no use sitting down and crying about it."

Yet it's not a false picture to go back to childhood to explain the years which follow. "Childhood memories are connected with so many things."

Perhaps it's the reader's responsibility to colour in the rest, just as Miss Curry will not provide you with every minute detail of the scene she paints: Imagine yourself a young woman, in step with nature yet also embracing the advantages of city living. Canada is a young country, developing its own personality, and you're capturing that on canvas, along with the nation's other bright lights. To do so, you're also forging a new role for women, accepting full responsibility for yourself, no longer under the care of your parents, then husband. But opening hearts to new adventures can also cause pain, and that too must be accepted. However, with a stroke of the brush, a stroke of memory, you can paint over the not-so-fond days. Leaving only the days of innocence, and the perfection only children can find.
